According to the Alzheimer's Association 1 in 9 people in the United States ages 65 and older have been diagnosed with the disease and millions more are suffering with other forms of dementia. As a healthcare professional serving seniors, you undoubtedly have already encountered the challenges of providing the best care possible to those with these behavioral health challenges. But what are some practical ways to provide better care, communication, and appropriate intervention when needed for people with dementia? In this interactive and practical session, participants will learn:

- New strategies for managing difficult behaviors of those with dementia
- Tips for better communication with clients, patients & family members facing the challenges of dementia
- Tools to handle difficult behavioral interventions when necessary to promote the safety & well-being of clients, patients & residents
